Canada

This document is intended to provide a quick overview of health programs and services available on reserve. The health programs and services are provided by many organizations including the local First Nation, tribal council, First Nations and Inuit Health Branch - Health Canada (FNIHB), Alberta Health Services (AHS) and/or the local Primary Care Network (PCN).

Health Canada is the federal department responsible for helping the people of Canada maintain and improve their health. We assess the safety of drugs and many consumer products, help improve the safety of food, and provide information to Canadians to help them make healthy decisions. We provide health services to First Nations people and to Inuit communities. We work with the provinces to ensure our health care system serves the needs of Canadians.

PARTNERSHIPS

In the last few years, a number of First Nations communities have begun working more regularly with Alberta Health Services (AHS) and their local Primary Care Network (PCN). Through these partnerships, First Nations communities seek greater access to health services and better relationships with a number of key providers. Alberta Health Services support First Nations clients and families in ensuring care coordination between AHS services and programs and First Nations health services. The care coordination is provided through Aboriginal Liaison, Cultural Helpers and Aboriginal Care Coordinators.

PRIMARY AND ACUTE CARE

This section outlines the point of first contact for many on-reserve First Nations with the health system in Alberta. All First Nations communities access some level of community and public health through their community health representatives and nurses. Many communities have also succeeded in securing additional health programs and services including access to mobile diagnostic clinics, regular access to physicians and even midwifery in a few communities.

HEALTH PROMOTION AND DISEASE PREVENTION

This section outlines the health promotion and disease prevention efforts in First Nations communities. While many of these programs and services are funded by First Nations and Inuit Health Branch (FNIHB) others represent the communities’ commitment to address key issues such as injury prevention.

PUBLIC HEALTH

Public health focuses on the protection and promotion of the health of the entire population. In First Nations communities, public health includes two key components: Communicable Disease Control (CDC) and Environmental Public Health (EPH).

COMMUNICABLE DISEASE CONTROL (CDC)

Communicable Disease Control is a mandatory and required program in all First Nations communities. Disease control is achieved through screening, diagnosis, treatment and prevention of illness. The mandatory CDC programs and services include:

- Immunization including routine childhood immunizations, adult and influenza immunizations
- Outbreak management including CDC emergency, infection prevention and control, animal bites follow-up and notifiable diseases
- Blood-Borne Pathogens/Sexually Transmitted Infections (BBP/STIs)
- Tuberculosis Control in partnership with Alberta Health Services.

STI partner notification is provided by AHS in all communities.

ENVIRONMENTAL PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICES PROVIDED BY FNIHB AND AHS

This section highlights the work done to identify, prevent and reduce environmental public health risks that could affect the health of First Nations communities. First Nations and Inuit Health Branch (FNIHB) provides the following services to all the communities listed below:

- Emergency preparedness and response
- Environmental public health services
- Outbreak investigation
- General inspection for playground safety
- Safe built environments
