PREFACE

Except in a few localities the work of public libraries in Canada has shown little increase during the ten years this biennial survey has been made. Well over half of the Canadian population is still without public library service, as compared with one-fourth in the United States and less than 1 p.c. in Britain. Expenditure for libraries here continues to be less than 20 cents per capita, while it approaches 30 cents in Britain and is more than 40 cents in the United States.

The total volume of public library reading is less than it was ten years ago, and has declined particularly in adult fiction during the war years. One obvious reason for the wartime decline lies in the number of readers who by joining the armed services have gone out of reach of the libraries,—to training centres, defence areas, overseas, etc. There has, moreover, been no general plan by means of which librarians could provide a compensating service to enlisted readers. Some library boards out of local resources have made special attempts to meet the library problem of training centres in or near their cities, but in the main the provision of reading material for service personnel has been left to voluntary agencies.

Children's reading shows an increase. The newer school programs of study, placing less reliance on a few text books and recommending access to a wide selection of books, doubtless have much to do with this. A special compilation is presented in Table 6 on the use of libraries by juveniles. In addition to the traffic in books recorded there, it is to be noted that a few dozen libraries make provision for story hours or classes to be conducted on the library premises, while others have members of the library staff visit the schools.

Due to special wartime circumstances this Survey appears for the second time without an analytical review of the tabular matter presented; Section I is restricted to summary tabulations. Section II lists libraries with certain data for each individually as usual and includes the new population figures from the census of 1941. The library statistics are for the calendar year 1941, thus continuing the biennial series begun in 1931.

The Survey has again been prepared in the Education Branch of the Bureau under the supervision of John E. Robbins, M.A., Ph. D.

S. A. CUDMORE,

Dominion Statistician.
