Information about Information

INFOMAT is a new service of Statistics Canada.

Its purpose: to inform you on the now, the new, and what's to come in Statistics Canada information products and services. In short, information about information.

INFOMAT won't report in any depth on any aspect of the large weekly flow of Statistics Canada information (about 125 pages a day - 3,000 issues of publications per year).

INFOMAT, rather, will skim the highlights from reports of wide interest. It will draw your attention to first-time reports from Statistics Canada, new services, new surveys, new forms of information. It will act as your guide to what has been published (see listings, page 4).

We hope you will find INFOMAT a useful addition to your information files. We welcome suggestions for adding to our mailing list. (Write to the Editor, Greg Thomson, INFOMAT, Statistics Canada, Ottawa K1A OT6).

FEATURE REPORT

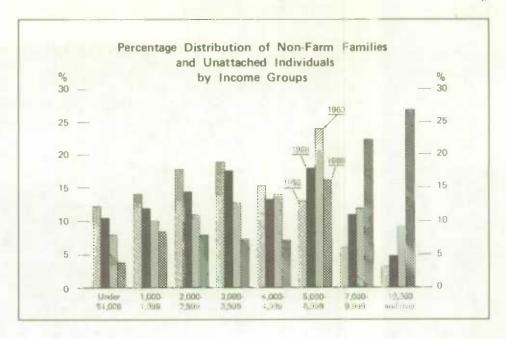

Incomes, assets and indebtedness of families in Canada, 1969.

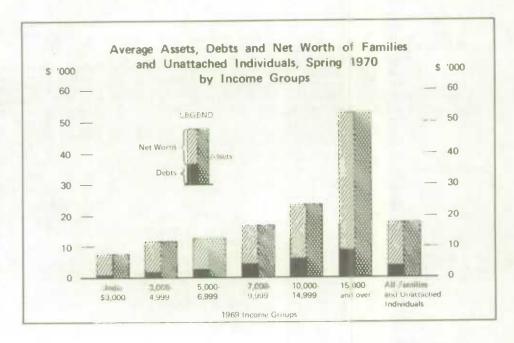

This latest in a series of periodic reports on Canadian family incomes and finances is based on data collected during the 1970 Survey of Consumer Finances. Asset holdings and indebtedness of the family units at the time of the survey are reviewed in the feature, Incomes, assets and indebtedness of families in Canada, 1969, just published.

Some of the highlights, with accompanying charts:

- Significant shifts in distribution marked by a gradual and continuous reduction in the proportion of family units in the lower income groups and an increase in the proportion in higher income groups. In 1969, some 26.7% of families reported annual incomes of $10,000 or more compared with only 3.1% in 1955 (Chart 1).
- Average total asset holding of all family units in 1969 was $17,646. There were large disparities among family units, though, and about 62% of all families and unattached individuals held less than average assets while about 38% held greater than average assets.
- Average net worth of all families and unattached individuals amounted to $14,369 with greatest equity in the net value of homes. Average net worth varied with income, amounting to about $33,900 for family units in the $15,000-$24,999 bracket compared to approximately $4,000 for the lowest-income group (Chart 2).

For the full range of data and analysis, order: Incomes, assets and indebtedness of families in Canada, 1969 (13-547, $2).
