13. Urban Development in Canada Canada is at the forefront of world urbanization, claims Dr. Leroy O. Stone, in the latest Dominion Bureau of Statistics publication, "Urban Development in Canada". The book is one of a series of monographs based on census information being published by DBS.

The rate of urbanization of population varies by provinces and by regions, the Prairies leading the way with a 28% increase between 1951-1961. Ten years before Confederation in 1867, only 13% of Canada's population lived in urban centres. By 1961, at least 70% of the greatly increased Canadian population was urbanized. Suburban population increased by 118% between 1951 and 1961, at a rate of at least five times that of incorporated centres (the Prairies excepted).

The increase of major urban complexes (5,000 plus population) in Canada is significant. In 1871 there were about 20, by 1901 about 60, and 137 in 1951. In the last decade ending in 1961 an increase of 53 brought the total to 190. Of that total, in 1961, 46% had a population of less than 10,000. But 10% had more than 100,000 people, and that 10% contains almost half of Canada's population.

Dr. Stone, author of the 300-page book, is Consultant of Demographic Research at DBS and an assistant professor at the University of Western Ontario. He is completing the first volume of a further monograph on internal migration in Canada to be published later this year.
