

CYBERSTALKING IN CANADA

Instances of Cyberstalking by region

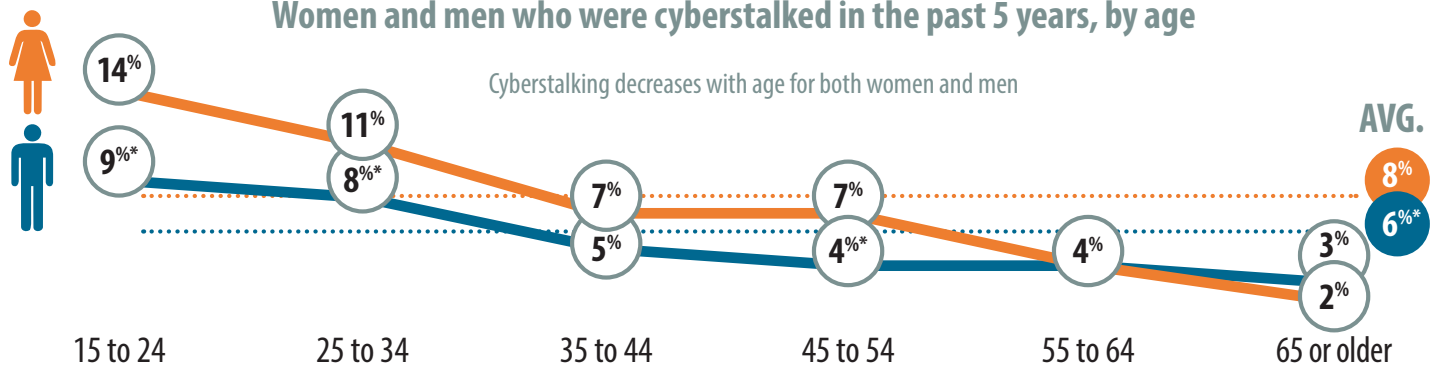

A person has experienced “cyberstalking” if they have been subject to repeated and unwanted online attention, within the past five years. This includes receiving unwanted messages via e-mail, text, or social media or having someone post inappropriate, unwanted or personal information or pictures on a social media site.

Those who experienced discrimination in the past 5 years are more likely than those who had not experienced discrimination to have been cyberstalked.

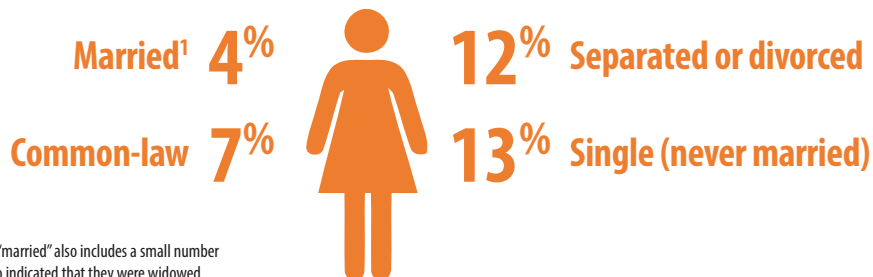

Women and men who were cyberstalked in the past 5 years, by age

* Significantly different from women at $p < 0.05$

Notes: Excludes the territories. Includes only those who had used the Internet at some point in the past 5 years.

Single and separated/divorced women are more likely than other women to report being cyberstalked

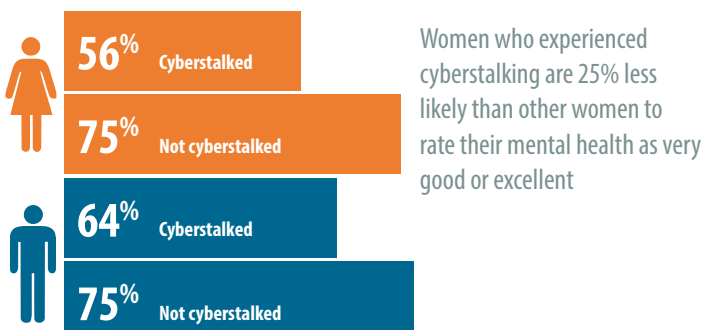

1. The category “married” also includes a small number of people who indicated that they were widowed.

Separated or divorced women who have been cyberstalked are also more likely than other separated or divorced women to report having been physically or sexually abused by an ex-spouse

Mental Health

% of Canadians who reported very good or excellent mental health

Personal Safety

% of Canadians who are satisfied or very satisfied with their personal safety

ISBN: 978-0-660-23833-3
Catalogue number: 11-627-M

Source: Statistics Canada, General Social Survey on Canadians' Safety (Victimization), 2014