PREFACE

This Classification of Occupations is designed for use in the Census of Canada 1961. A revision of the occupational classification used in the immediately preceding census is prepared each decade to take account of changes that have occurred in the occupational structure of the country due to developments in the economy. The revision this time is quite substantial because of the rapid growth in industrialization and the introduction of new materials and methods in the past decade.

The system of grouping has been completely revised with a view to creating more homogeneous occupational groups. Similarly, the terminology used in the group and class headings has been chosen to emphasize that the content is occupational and not industrial. A changed class or group heading, then, does not necessarily indicate a change in its content as against the 1951 classification and an examination of the classes within the new groups will show that many of them are the same as in 1951. Nonetheless, some new classes have been added, former classes have been dropped and the content of many classes altered.

This volume was prepared in the Census (Demography) Division of DBS by Miss Alice G. Wood and the staff of the Occupations and Employment Unit with the cooperation of the Mechanical Tabulation Division in the sorting and reproduction of the indexes. The project was supervised generally by Neil L. McKellar, Consultant on Classifications.

OCCUPATIONAL CLASSIFICATION MANUAL

CENSUS OF CANADA, 1961

INTRODUCTION

This Classification of Occupations has been prepared primarily for use in the Census of Canada 1961. Occupational data from the census are used in conjunction with statistics from current surveys and, therefore, the Census Classification of Occupations is used widely for statistical survey work. This is a revision of the 1951 Census Classification of Occupations and the grouping system is quite different from that used in 1951 but many of the occupational classes remain unchanged. Some classes have been added to take account of new developments (e.g., Class 187 Computer programmers and 198 Science and engineering technicians, n.e.s.) and others have been discontinued because they have become relatively less important (e.g., Harness and saddle makers, Coopers). The changes in the grouping system and in the terminology of group titles are designed to provide categories that are more homogeneous from an occupational point of view and a terminology with an occupational rather than an industrial flavour.

The classification consists of 273 occupation classes (each class is identified by a 3-digit code) grouped under 12 major divisions. (An additional division No. 13 includes workers for whom no occupational information is reported.) A list of divisions is shown on page 15. and a list of groups and classes comprising these divisions is shown on page 16. In the Classified Index, the component occupational terms are arranged alphabetically within each class. The list of terms for each class may be considered as constituting a definition of the class; at least they are illustrative of the content. The Alphabetical Index presents the occupational terms in alphabetical order together with their respective 3-digit codes. There are some 16,000 occupational terms in this Classification which is by no means exhaustive. If users of the Classification encounter terms that are not covered in the index, the Census Division, Dominion Bureau of Statistics, would appreciate being informed so that the index can be augmented and be more useful for the next census.

Related Classifications

For statistical purposes the classification of occupations does not stand alone but it must be understood as related to a particular classification of industries and of status—as self-employed (E or OA), employee (W), unpaid family worker

(NP).¹ Each of these statistical classifications aids and supplements the others in presenting a rounded picture of the nature of a person's job. At the same time, each classification is independent in the sense that it uses a different set of facts and different criteria to present a particular facet of the individual's relationship to his work or his job. Very briefly, the principal features of these classifications are as follows:

A person's occupation is described in terms of the kind of work he performs. He is classified according to the nature of his work regardless of the kind of establishment in which it is carried on or of his status in that establishment. For example, a motor vehicle repairman is classified to the occupation class "mechanics and repairmen, motor vehicle" whether he works for a motor vehicle repair shop, a trucking firm, a factory, a store or any other kind of establishment. He is also classified to "mechanics and repairmen, motor vehicle" if this is the kind of work he is doing, whether he owns his repair shop (i.e. is self-employed) or works in a shop belonging to someone else (i.e. is an employee). Similarly, a carpenter may be employed by a construction firm, a mine, a factory, a school, a hospital, or any other kind of establishment. A classification of occupations, then, is a means by which the individuals enumerated can be distributed in relatively homogeneous classes according to the kind of work they perform.

The industry in which an individual is employed is determined by the nature of business of the establishment in which he works. For this purpose an "establishment" may consist of an individual working on his own account but usually it is a factory, mine, farm, store or other place of business having certain basic records. An industrial classification is used to classify establish-

Worked for others

wage or salary earner (i.e., W)	unpaid family worker (i.e., NP)
------------------------------------	------------------------------------

Operated own business or farm with paid help (i.e., E)	without paid help (i.e., OA)

-----------------------------	---------------------------------

(The symbols have been added here to indicate the connection between the census questions and the status categories.)

ments according to branches of economic activity, i.e., industries. It is one of the most widely used statistical classifications because in many cases information is obtained for the establishment and not for the individuals working in it. When the census obtains information from individuals, however, and classifies each one both according to the kind of work he does (occupation) and the kind of establishment in which he works (industry), this two-way classification system reveals much more clearly the nature of the individual's work than does either a distribution by occupation or industry alone.

An individual's relationship to the enterprise in which he is engaged—i.e., his status—as self-employed (E or OA), employee (W), or unpaid family worker (NP), provides another means of describing his work. In this case the grouping system depends upon the kind of service performed by the individual as indicated by the kind of remuneration he receives. (The self-employed depend upon a residual return in the form of profit while employees are paid wages or salaries and unpaid family workers receive no set remuneration.) The addition of status to the other two classifications gives a rounded picture of the nature of the individual's employment.

It should be clear from the above brief descriptions that each of the three classification systems is independent, yet together they form a related system. The Standard Industrial Classification Manual published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in 1960 is the companion industrial classification to the present volume. In some cases, the nature of a person's work is more clearly understood if, in addition to an occupational designation, the industry and/or status are also taken into account. Thus, some of the terms in this classification are followed by industry or by status designations. The term "captain", for example, describes quite different jobs depending upon the industry, while the occupation "buyer" describes a different occupation depending upon whether the individual is self-employed or works for others.

Basis for the Classification of Occupations

As stated above, an individual's occupation for census purposes is determined by the kind of work he does (or did) in his current (or most recent) job. To translate this concept into a classification scheme suitable for the census and for statistical purposes in general, however, presents many problems. These may be considered conveniently as of two main types: (a) selection of the most satisfactory principles or criteria for the classification and (b) the more practical measures required to take account of the nature of the basic data.

(a) Principles of Classification

The object in designing any classification system is to obtain groups and classes that are as homogeneous as possible. In a classification of occupations the main factors that determine the kind of work done and which therefore must be relatively homogeneous include education and training; material worked with; tools and equipment used; or working environment. Each of these factors has particular importance for certain groups of occupations; for example, education and training for the professional, technical and related workers; material worked with for certain craftsmen and production process workers such as leather or metal working occupations; and working environment for miners, quarrymen and related workers.

No one criterion is sufficient to separate all of the groups and classes required for analysis of the labour force by occupation. Experience has shown that different criteria are appropriate with different groups and, therefore, the present classification uses all of the above factors.

Occupational data from the census and other statistical surveys are used for many purposes. These include general analysis of the kind of development taking place in the economy as revealed by changes in the broad occupational structure. For example, a growth in the relative importance of professional, clerical and other "white collar" workers has been evident in recent decades with a consequent decline in the relative importance of the mining, craft and production process and other "blue collar" categories. This kind of change is revealed by occupational data much more clearly than by industrial statistics. In addition, the occupational data from the census are used as a population base for many purposes and they provide a means for obtaining groups of occupational classes that exhibit a satisfactory degree of homogeneity from the viewpoint of social attitudes and behaviour. Such categories are especially valuable in studies dealing with such matters as rates of population growth, family size and composition, family income and expenditure, housing policy, and social insurance policy.

The choice of criteria for setting up classes must be related to the purposes that the data are expected to serve. Considering the variety of uses made of census data, it is advisable to provide as many classes as possible from the basic enumeration so that individual users can regroup these classes according to their own requirements. The grouping system provided in the classification is not intended, therefore, to meet all needs but it separates those groups within which the maximum number of homogeneous classes can be provided. Thus, within the Managerial Occupations, for example, separate classes are provided for certain types of salaried managers such as sales managers and office managers, found in many different kinds of establishments. This leaves a large group of managers to be classified in the occupational class Owners and Managers, n.e.s. which will be broken down by industry groups at the tabulation stage. See Appendix on page 467 for these subdivisions. This cross-classification by industry is done because the industrial attachment of this miscellaneous group of owners and managers represents the most useful criterion for describing more specifically the kind of work they do.

The Professional and Technical Occupations obviously form a category of wide usefulness. Within this broad division, groups are provided for such categories as Professional Engineers, Physical Scientists, Health Professionals and others, each of which contains occupations having some attribute in common and in most cases the groups contain residual classes. This system provides more useful occupational classes than was possible in earlier census classifications that did not use the groups. Similarly, each of the other main divisions has been chosen with a view to providing groups of occupations within each of which a particular criterion or narrow range of criteria could be applied to advantage.

(b) Practical Measures

The population census obtains a statement of each person's job from a responsible member of his household as part of a relatively complicated enumeration procedure that gathers information relating to population, housing and agriculture. Under these circumstances, the enumerator cannot obtain a precise statement of the kind of work performed by the individual. Thus, the occupational descriptions shown on the census documents tend to be quite broad and general. To attempt to classify these basic data according to an elaborate and detailed classification system would be futile because the classification system would require greater precision than the basic data possess. For example, a classification of Craftsmen, Production Process and Related Workers on the basis of degrees of skill requires information on each individual's apprenticeship or other training and work experience. Such information can be secured when the individual is interviewed by an experienced placement officer or occupational analyst. For census returns and for most statistical purposes, however, although skill is taken into account, the categories used must contain a relatively broad range of skills and the most useful groups have been found to be those based upon the kind of material worked upon and the kind of processes performed. Consideration of the skill involved is implicit in each such category.

Relationship to the International Standard Classification of Occupations

The International Standard Classification of Occupations was published by the International Labour Organization in 1958. This classification was developed by the ILO to provide a basis for the international comparison of occupational data and to afford guidance to countries wishing to develop or improve their systems of occupational classification. Countries are not expected to adopt the international classification for their internal work but it is an advantage if the domestic classification is so arranged that data obtained with its use can be rearranged into the international structure. These considerations were kept in mind when designing the present census classification. Its grouping system resembles that of the international classification and, where possible, decisions on the coverage of classes were made on the basis of the international recommendations. Thus, although in some cases the structure of Canadian industry does not permit strict adherence to the international recommendations, data resulting from the use of this classification can be rearranged to correspond quite closely with the International Standard Classification of Occupations.

GENERAL EXPLANATIONS

Alphabetical Arrangement

The arrangement of occupational terms in the Alphabetical Index is consistent with the alphabetical arrangement in the Standard Industrial Classification. Each word in a term is taken separately for purposes of alphabetical arrangement. Thus, the following terms will be found in this order in the alphabetical index:

car dealer	carder
car painter	caretaker
car washer	carpenter
card grinder	carton wrapper

If the same list of terms were arranged in strict alphabetical order ignoring the separate words in the terms, the arrangement would be as follows:

car dealer	car painter
carder	carpenter
card grinder	carton wrapper
caretaker	car washer

If a two-worded term is not found readily in the Alphabetical Index it is important, therefore, to consider whether it may have been reported as a single word or vice versa.

Multiple-Word Occupational Terms

Many occupational terms shown in the Index contain two or more words. If an attempt were made to cross-index all multiple-word terms, the Index would become so long as to be unwieldy. In the Alphabetical Index, therefore, the following practices are followed:

(a) Certain occupational terms commonly reported in a given order are indexed only in that order. Examples are:

cabinet maker	lathe hand
calender man	notary public drill runner	paper boy
heat treater	track worker
kiln burner	trouble shooter

(b) Key words: Many occupational terms contain one commonly used word which we shall refer to as the key word. The following have been selected as key words:

agent	inspector
apprentice	manager
assistant	mechanic
assembler	operator
engineer	repairman
helper

Occupational terms containing any of these selected words are listed only once in the Alphabetical Index. They are indexed in alphabetical order according to the word or words making up the rest of the term. For example, if "diesel engineer" is reported on the census questionnaire, look under "Engineer, specified type" for "diesel"; you will not find "diesel engineer" under the D's.

(c) Cross-indexing: Occupation terms commonly reported both in the natural order of the words and in some inverted order are shown both ways in the Alphabetical Index. For example, parking attendant and attendant, parking and bottling foreman and foreman, bottling are shown. There are many cases in which multiple-word terms, unless a key word forms part of the term, are cross-indexed. Therefore, unless a key word forms part of the term, it is necessary to try all possible orders of words before deciding that the term is not in the Alphabetical Index.

Abbreviated Occupational Terms

Abbreviated occupational terms are indexed at the top of each alphabetical section as determined by the first letter. Examples are: A.B. seaman for able seaman; C.P.A. for certified public accountant; L.A.C. for leading aircraftsman; P.B.X. operator for private-branch-exchange operator; R.O.P. inspector for record of performance inspector.

Industrial Qualifications

The occupation terms appear in the index in combination with industry. The use of industry as a guide in classifying the occupation returns is necessary because the same occupation term is sometimes applied to entirely different kinds of work in different industries. For terms having no particular industry association, the term "any ind." is used.

The industrial qualifications have been chosen so far as practicable to conform in an abbreviated form with the group or class terms used in the Standard Industrial Classification Manual.

The following list contains the main instances in which abbreviated terms have been used and gives the corresponding industry code numbers:

Asbestos	071, 355
Bakery prod. ind.	128, 129
Const.	404-409, 421
Dairy prod.	105-107, 614, 631
Fed. admin.	902-909
Food mfg.	101-139
Forest.; log.	031, 039
Knitting mills	231-239
Leather goods mfg.	174-179
Mfg.	101-399
Meat prod. ind.	101-103
Medical service	821-827
Metal fabric. ind.	301-309
Metalworking.....	291-339
Mines or mining	051-079
Misc. mfg.	381-399
Paper goods mfg.	273, 274
Plastics	373, 385
Primary metal ind.	291-298
Print. & pub.	286-289
Public admin.	902-991
Quarry	083-087

Ret. trade	631-699
Textile mill	183-219
Trade	602-699
Trans.	501-519
Whole. trade	602-629
Woodworking	251-268

In a few instances, however, the industry qualification appearing in the Index may not relate to the principal activity of the establishment as is the case of "foundry". In many cases foundry operations may be the ancillary activity of an establishment. For example, a foundry type of occupation such as "moulder" may be reported in an establishment primarily engaged in the "manufacture of electric ranges" but, if the information available indicates that the person is engaged in the foundry part of the operation, the occupation code 786 given in the Index for "Moulder—Foundry" can be assigned to the person's occupation.

Industry code numbers are used sometimes as an industrial qualification to avoid the use of long industry titles. For example, see "Loader—Ind. 504, 505", in the Index.

Words in Parentheses: Some of the occupational terms in the classification contain words in parentheses. For example, see the terms "engineer, refrigeration (mech. engineer) — Any ind." and "engineer, refrigeration (stationary engineer) — Any ind.". The term "refrigeration engineer" describes different jobs depending upon whether the person is professionally trained or not. The number of completed years of schooling reported is the factor to be used in determining whether the correct code to apply is 102 or 872. Similarly, other engineers such as aerial engineer and power plant engineer can only be classified correctly if the education entry is taken into account.

Special Rules regarding Certain Occupations

Apprentices: As a general rule apprentices (or improvers, learners, trainees) are classified with the occupations for which they are being trained. Thus, an apprentice plumber is classified as a plumber, an apprentice printer as a printer, an apprentice draughtsman as a draughtsman and an apprentice photographer as a photographer. An exception is made, however, in the case of most of the professional occupations as many apprentices in the professions do not complete the courses needed to qualify them as professionals. Student nurses are not classified in class 142 Nurses, graduate; a special class (Nurses-in-training) is provided for them. Articled clerks in offices of chartered accountants are classified in class 201 Bookkeepers and cashiers. Articled clerks in law offices are not classified as lawyers but in class 249 Clerical occupations, n.e.s. Apprentices in engineering, pharmacy and other sciences are included in class 198 Science and engineering technicians, n.e.s.

Foreman: The term "foreman" is used to describe a fairly wide range of supervisory workers. Certain types of foremen, particularly those supervising groups of skilled workers, are closely associated with the work and may actually perform some of the work themselves. At least, they are able to do the work and to instruct others in it. Such foremen are classified with the occupation concerned, e.g., carpenter foreman with carpenters; foreman weaver with weavers.

The second main type of foreman is purely a supervisor who assigns work and coordinates the efforts of a group of workers, usually a group carrying out a variety of types of work. This kind of foreman is classified according to the environment in which he works. Thus, foremen in trade are in class 301; foremen of transport operations in class 510; foremen of communication operations in 570; farm foremen in 603; logging foremen in 611; foremen of fishing operations in 631; mine foremen in 651; general foremen in construction in 851; and foremen, n.e.s. in 900. To indicate more precisely the kind of work done by those included in Foremen, n.e.s., provision has been made to subdivide the class on a broad industry basis. See Appendix on page 467.

Labourers, excluding those engaged in agricultural, fishing, logging or mining operations: In a general sense, this class of labourers includes workers in "unskilled" occupations not specifically allocated to any other group. Excluded, for the most part are workers performing labouring functions in farming (classified in class 605); in fishing (classified in class 631); in logging operations (classified in 615); in mining and milling (classified in 657); loading and unloading ships' cargoes (in class 881); loading and unloading materials from trucks, freight cars, etc. (in class 883); laying and repairing railway tracks (in class 890). Note, however, that labourers in quarries and petroleum and gas wells are not excluded from this class. Subdivisions of this residual group of labourers, i.e., class 920 by industry groups will be made mechanically. See Appendix on page 467 for these subdivisions.

Members of the Armed Forces: Two classes are provided for members of the Armed Forces viz., 407—Commissioned Officers, Armed Forces, or 408—Other Ranks Armed Forces, depending upon whether or not they are commissioned. Those holding the army rank of Warrant Officer (or equivalent) or lower are classified to 408 while those having the army rank 2nd Lieutenant (or equivalent) or higher are classified to 407. The occupational designation of members of the Armed Forces does not depend upon the kind of work they do so far as the census is concerned, therefore, members of the Armed Forces are not to be coded to the kind of work they do even though it is reported on the census questionnaire. Coders may, in some cases, have to examine the entry for name of person to determine the rank.

Civilian employees, on the other hand, employed by the Department of National Defence, are always coded to the occupation reported.

Members of the religion profession: Those members of the religion profession who are primarily engaged in lay occupations such as teaching, nursing, social welfare work, sewing, bookbinding, cooking, or farming should be classified as such. Occupation classes 161, 163 and 169 for Religion Professionals are intended to include only persons who are primarily engaged in performing religious functions.

Proprietors: In general, proprietors (or owners, co-owners, partners) are classified in Division 1 Managerial Occupations. The two principal exceptions are proprietors of farming operations—classified in 601 Farmers and stockraisers (E or OA)—and proprietors and managers of boarding and lodging houses—classified in 411 Lodging and boarding house keepers. There are other exceptions, however, to take care of cases in which the proprietor of a particular kind of business is primarily engaged in the trade, craft or occupation concerned and not in the management of the business. Examples of proprietors classified to the occupation class concerned are the following:

Proprietor (E or OA) and manager—Barber shop, beauty shop (classified in "451 Barbers, hairdressers, manicurists")

Proprietor (E or OA) and manager—Custom tailoring shop (Ind. 242) (classified in "741 Tailors and tailorsesses")

Proprietor (E or OA) and manager—Business college or private school (classified in "135 School teachers")

Proprietor (E or OA) and manager—Art gallery (classified in "172 Artists (except commercial), art teachers")

Proprietor (E or OA) and manager—Photographic studio (classified in "196 Photographers").

Persons managing a professional activity such as managers of a firm of accountants, consulting engineers or lawyers are coded to their respective professions.

In addition, there are a number of kinds of business in which the own-account proprietor is assumed to be engaged in the occupation concerned but a proprietor who is an employer is assumed to be primarily engaged in managing the business. In such cases the own-account proprietor is classified to the occupation concerned rather than to class 010 Owners and managers, n.e.s. Examples are:

Proprietor (OA)—Retail drug store (classified in "147 Pharmacists")

Proprietor (OA)—Taxi cab operation (classified in "552 Taxi drivers and chauffeurs")

Proprietor (OA)—Trucking (classified in "556 Truck drivers")

Proprietor (OA)—Shoe repair shop (classified in "724 Shoemakers and repairers—not in factory")

Proprietor (OA)—Auto repair shop (classified in "822 Mechanics and repairmen, motor vehicle").

Similarly, persons reported as own-account contractor or own-account manufacturer are usually engaged in the trade or craft indicated. Therefore, persons reported as own-account contractor in carpentry, painting, plastering, plumbing, etc., are coded respectively to carpenter, painter, plasterer, plumber, etc. Likewise, an own-account manufacturer of artificial flowers should be classified as an artificial flower maker.

In all such cases, it is assumed that the own-account proprietor, owner, contractor, manufacturer is primarily engaged in carrying on the trade or occupation implied by the kind of business while proprietors, etc., who are employers are primarily engaged in the direction and management of the business. Thus, employers and managers in these kinds of business are classified in class 010 Owners and managers, n.e.s.

Teachers (or Instructors): A special group is provided for Teachers in Division 2 Professional and technical occupations. This group includes professors and college principals as well as school teachers and teachers and instructors, n.e.s. (It should be noted that so long as teaching is the individual's main occupation a university professor is coded in the census to class 131 Professors and college principals and not to the occupation indicated by his professional training.) However, special teachers and instructors of art, dancing, drama, music and the like are classified according to the occupation in which they give instruction since a music teacher, for example, is usually a performer also.

Teachers and instructors engaged in instructing other workers in the technical aspects of their occupations during the course of their regular employment (this is commonly known as on-the-job training) are classified according to the craft or specialized work in which they instruct. Instructors are therefore distinct from foremen who may give instruction as part of their duties.

Trade instructors in educational, reformatory and corrective institutions are, however, classified to the teaching profession; those in educational institutions being allocated to class 135 School teachers and those in reformatory and corrective institutions to class 139 Teachers and instructors, n.e.s.

Abbreviations

A list of abbreviations used throughout this volume is given on page 14 and is for the most part self-explanatory. Particular attention, however, need be given to the abbreviations "n.s.", "n.e.s." and "n.o.r.". "N.s." means "not stated" or "not specified" on the census questionnaire. "N.e.s." means "not elsewhere specified" in the occupational classification. "N.o.r." means "not otherwise reported" on the census questionnaire.

"N.s." usually indicates that other similar but more specific occupation titles are listed in the classification of occupations and that the code symbol assigned to the occupation title qualified by this abbreviation is to be used only when the reported occupation together with any other entry on the census questionnaire (particularly the industry entry) does not indicate one of the more precise titles shown. A case in point is the term "859 Roofer, n.s. - Const." which appears in the Alphabetical Index together with such titles as "Roofer, wood shingle - Const."; "Roofer - Sheet metal roofing"; "Roofer, except wood shingle or sheet metal - Const.", etc. In coding roofer, therefore, the coder must carefully examine the list of roofers given and use the code symbol assigned to "roofers, n.s." only if the one reported does not fit any of the other titles shown. In the Index "n.s." is frequently implied as is the case where the term "manager" or "foreman" (unqualified) is followed by a dash and an industry qualification. In such cases, therefore, the coder must not use the assigned occupation code if the specific kind of manager or foreman is reported in the occupation entry on the census questionnaire. Nor can he use the assigned occupation code if the kind of manager or foreman can be inferred from the kind of business or industry entry particularly if the department of industry in which the person is engaged is reported as it is the department of the establishment in which a person works, not the principal activity of the establishment, which qualifies the occupation. For example, if retail dairy followed by delivery department or delivery (usually in brackets) is reported in the kind of business entry on the questionnaire, the determining factor in coding a "manager" (unqualified) in the corresponding occupation entry is "delivery department" and therefore such a person should be coded to 005, i.e., Delivery manager rather than to 010 Owners and managers, n.e.s.

"N.e.s." covers those cases where the occupation returned on the census questionnaire is not listed (in some other form) in the Index. The class "Mechanics and repairmen, n.e.s.", for example, indicates that additional and more specific occupation classes have been provided for mechanics, i.e., "Mechanics and repairmen, aircraft", "Medical and dental technicians", "Mechanics and repairmen, radio and television receivers", etc., leaving a large group of miscellaneous mechanics to be included in the general occupation class "Mechanics and repairmen, n.e.s.". The abbreviation "n.e.s." is also used in connection with the "industrial qualification" part of the occupation term. For example, see Painter - Mfg., n.e.s. with occupation code 843 in the Alphabetical Index. This means that the code 843 can be used for any painter in manufacturing industries which are not specified in the "industrial qualification" part of the terms for "Painter".

"N.o.r." covers those cases in which the lay occupations of members of religious orders who perform lay duties are not reported on the census schedule. The class "Nuns and brothers, n.o.r.", for example, indicates that nuns and brothers performing lay duties, regardless of their nature, are to be classified to their lay work. In coding a nun or sister, therefore, the coder must use the code 163 assigned to "Nuns and brothers, n.o.r." only if a lay occupation is not reported in the census or cannot be determined.
