CLASSIFICATION

THE CLASSIFICATION OF INDUSTRIES

Introduction

In approaching the problem of establishing the most useful possible standard classification of Industries, the Working Committee for Classification of Industries was faced with the necessity of formulating certain rules. Since these rules determine, in large measure, the nature of the classification, they are discussed here in some detail.

(a) Choice of bases: Little difficulty is encountered here except in the Manufacturing Division. Customarily, for example, agricultural establishments are classified to the type of farm as determined by the principal products, mines are classified according to the principal type of ore extracted. Similarly construction establishments are classified according to the type of construction chiefly undertaken, trading establishments by the type of product principally handled and service establishments by the type of service performed. Some differences inevitably arise respecting the precise grouping of such establishments, but the practice in different classifications has been sufficiently uniform that compromise is relatively easy.

In the Manufacturing Division, however, the groupings have varied considerably in past classifications. As is well known, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics traditionally has maintained a tri-partite classification (or, perhaps, three classifications) based upon: (a) chief component material, (b) purpose and (c) origin. The major difficulty with a classification of manufacturing industries based exclusively upon any one criterion is the large number of items necessarily included in indefinite or "miscellaneous" categories, necessitating in many cases large numbers of explanatory footnotes. Such classifications as "non-ferrous metal products", "Farm origin - Canadian", "Manufacturers' materials" are not very descriptive of the classes and items included.

For most purposes a classification of manufacturing industries based upon "chief component material" has, in the past, proved most useful in Canadian industrial classifications. For this reason the Bureau's classification based upon this concept has been the one most widely adopted for general purposes such as the Decennial Census, Vital Statistics, etc. Even for these purposes (as well as in over-all compilations by the General Manufacturers' Branch) some modification has been deemed expedient (as in the inclusion of such a group as "Textile Products", composed partly of animal and partly vegetable products).

When the industry of a country is primarily concerned with the early stages in the processing of primary materials (i.e. its final products are chiefly such items as pig iron, lumber and processed fish) a classification based upon chief component material is wholly applicable. As manufacturing industry develops, however, turning out more and more goods for final consumption, the combinations of ingredients in such output become more and more complex. The modern automotive, aircraft, shipbuilding, electrical products industries are examples in which a wide variety of materials must be assembled for the completion of the final product.

In recent years Canada's industrial system has undergone considerable development. Consequently in establishing the Standard Industrial Classification, the concept of "purpose" has been combined with that of "chief component material" in the framework of the classification of manufacturing industries. For the classification of consumers' goods industries the concept of "purpose" seems most applicable both in terms of common usage in referring to industries and in providing the type of data most often required. Hence, such major groups as Food and Beverages, Clothing, Transportation Equipment, Electrical Apparatus and Supplies, have been established.

(b) The Detail Possible in the Standard Classification: The committee decided to make the classification as detailed as the present structure of Canadian industry will permit, remembering that the unit classified is the establishment. For the purpose of classifying the gainfully occupied, this is the greatest detail that can be offered without danger of misleading the user of the data.

Persons making special studies may require greater detail concerning a certain branch of industry, or, to meet special demands for certain information, it may be necessary for one or more of those who use the classification to sub-divide certain of the established classes. These cases are special and it is felt that no committee can foresee and provide suitable breakdowns for these special purposes. If comparability can be achieved to the extent of the proposed breakdown, then comparable figures can be assembled for all practical purposes.

It has been the practice in the past, for example, to issue reports concerning the total production of certain commodities which may be produced by establishments coded to several classes in the general classification. The preparation of this Standard need interfere in no way with such established practices.

(c) The unit to be classified: In establishing a classification of this type, it must be kept in mind that the unit being classified is not the product but the productive organization. The productive organization may be interpreted as a "firm", "establishment", or "department". The term "firm" is taken to mean a productive unit having a legal status as such - i.e., the division here is essentially on the lines of ownership. Such a unit may, however, own and operate several "establishments", each of which may produce a product quite different from the others. The "establishments", in turn, may be composed of departments carrying on quite dissimilar activities.

Following almost universal practice in the field of employment statistics, the Committee decided to design the Standard Classification with a view to classifying industries on the basis of reports using the "establishment" as a unit. Since experience has shown that almost all firms maintain separate personnel and other records by establishments, this procedure is feasible. The practice of dividing the employees in an establishment on the basis of the commodity worked on is seldom practicable, since, even when separate payroll and other records are maintained by departments, such employees as the supervisory staff, service employees and central office staff customarily are concerned with matters affecting several or all departments.

(d) Determining the Principal Product: Although the group and class titles are in terms of products, employment figures under any class, for example, will indicate the number of employees in establishments primarily concerned with the production of that product. An establishment is said to be primarily concerned with the production of a given commodity when 50 p.c. or more of its output by value in the period for which latest returns are available consists of that product. If no one product or group of products assigned to the same class in the classification, comprise 50 p.c. or more by value of the establishment's output, the establishment is coded to the class to which its principal product, by value, has been assigned, provided that no group of subsidiary products, classified to the same class, comprise a greater total value than the principal product.

It is recognized that such decisions are arbitrary. Much of the value of a Standard Classification will be lost, however, if the various users code a certain establishment to different classes. The above rules have the virtue of being definite and the data required in applying them are readily available from the "Census of Industry" schedules. In addition, the dollar represents as universal and objective a unit upon which to base such decisions as is available.

(e) The Criteria for Establishing a "class": In creating a Classification of Industries the Committee recognized that it was faced with the task of putting into categories units that are essentially differentiated. Each productive unit is organized with a specific objective in mind and the precise form of its organization differs from that of any other. In addition, as the organization develops it adds activities and (or) products in accordance with its changing circumstances and in line with the objectives of the management.

The problem encountered at this stage is in reality the problem of defining an "industry". Rarely does one encounter an enterprise producing just one product or service and the possible combinations of products and services are almost infinitely varied. Economic theory offers little assistance since, in the Classical theory, an industry is defined as a sufficiently large group of establishments producing an identical product that no one of them can influence the price of the product. Similarly, the theoretical distinction between producers' goods and consumers' goods would be of little value here, since many commodities become one or the other only when sold by the producer. The theory of monopolistic or imperfect competition provides a concept of industry more nearly applicable to the situation actually existing. In this theory an industry is conceived as containing a group of establishments producing a similar but differentiated product. Even here, however, the establishment is considered as producing just one product and no definitive answer is given regarding the criteria determining the degree of similarity of products. Implied in the theory is the assumption that consumers' goods industries are the ones concerned and that the degree of similarity of products is determined by the degree to which they approach perfect substitutes for one another from the point of view of the consumer. It is evident that these considerations involve too many subjective factors to be used as the criteria for determining classes in a statistical tool such as the Classification of Industries.

While recognizing the existence of factors creating differences between productive organizations, the objective is to concentrate on the factors which bring about similarities in the units. Such broad divisions of industry as, for example, Agriculture, Mining, Manufacturing, Trade and Service obviously group together establishments having broadly similar objectives and organization under titles that have become part of common usage. Similarly, major industrial groupings such as Field Crops, Fruits and Vegetables; Metal Mining; Foods and Beverages; Leather Products, Iron and Steel Products; Transportation; Retail Trade; Business Service; are likely to cause little ambiguity since the units included in each have many characteristics in common arising out of either the processes performed, the material worked with, the type of service rendered or principal commodities produced.

The more detailed the classification, however, the more obvious become the factors differentiating productive units. There may be, for example, five establishments in Canada producing electric irons and nothing else. At the same time there may be fifty establishments producing household electrical appliances most of which produce electric irons as one of their products. This is a typical situation in many lines of endeavour.

In such a case as the one cited, there is no doubt that the establishments involved are classified to Manufacturing, to the major group Electrical Apparatus and Supplies, although cases arise in which even the Division and Major Group present a problem. Is it possible, however, to establish a class "Electric Irons" under this major group? To answer questions of this type the Committee undertook a number of special studies of Census of Industry schedules when a satisfactory answer was not available from existing tabulations. The Census of Industry schedules contain a list of the products turned out in a year by each establishment, with the quantity and value of each product. These studies resulted in tables showing the value of electric irons, for example, and of other products produced by establishments making electric irons. If the major part of the total output of irons were concentrated in those firms producing only irons, then the possibility of establishing such a class was demonstrated. Other considerations then entered, such as the number of establishments involved, the number of employees in these establishments according to the most suitable returns, the likelihood of post-war expansion or contraction in the industry, etc. No definite rulings were enunciated by the Committee covering decisions based upon these studies, each case being determined on its merits according to the information available. Generally, however, it was considered misleading to create a class when establishments producing less than 50 p.c. of the total output of the product concerned would be coded to the class and the standard set in virtually all decisions was nearer 75 p.c. than 50 p.c.

At the same time, these studies and the tabulations available from the Census of Industry, other Bureau branches and the Department of Labour, provided data to solve another troublesome question, i.e. what specific products may reasonably be grouped together to form a class? In each case this question was answered by a study of the groups of products produced by the firms in existing industry classes as well as those in other classes which produced some of the products included in the class in question. At all times the Committee has endeavoured to base its decisions as to the combining of existing classes, setting up of new classes and determining the content of classes, on a study of available material.

In addition, as each industry group was considered, the person in charge of that group in the Decennial Census, the Census of Industry, Census of Construction, Census of Merchandising and Service Establishments, Transportation and Public Utilities Branch, etc., was asked to attend the Committee's meetings. The persons concerned were most co-operative and the Committee is deeply appreciative of their expert counsel in their respective fields.

(f) International Standards: Under the auspices of the International Labour Organization, successive meetings of labour statisticians from member nations since 1923, have drawn up suggested groupings of occupations and industries suitable for classifying the gainfully occupied. The meeting of British Commonwealth Statisticians in 1935 also discussed the problems of classification with a view to obtaining greater comparability in the data published by the Commonwealth nations. In 1938, the Report of the Committee of Statistical Experts of the League of Nations contained a suggested classification of industries. At its third session, in April 1948, the United Nations Statistical Commission gave final approval to an International Standard Industrial Classification of all Economic Activities. The Canadian Standard Classification of Industries does not follow in toto the international standard. The international proposals were, however, considered by the Committee and, when departure from them was decided upon for special reasons, major groups and classes were established in such manner as to allow regrouping of data obtained from the Canadian Standard Classification to fit the groups and sub-groups established by the United Nations Classification.

(g) Custom and Repair Work: The quite fundamental question regarding the proper classification of establishments engaged in custom and repair work arose quite early in the Committee deliberations. A final decision was not made, however, until much later when the last Major Division (Service) was being considered.

The U.S. Standard Industrial Classification provides a Major Group in the Service Division for Automobile Repair Services and Garages and another Major Group for Miscellaneous Repair Services and Hand Trades, which includes such items as blacksmith shops; electrical repair shops; watch, clock and jewellery repair, upholstery and furniture repair, etc. This classification places shoe repair with Personal Services and custom tailoring with retail trade. The Industrial Classification Manual used by the Department of Labour since 1943 established, within the Division "Service", a Major Group entitled "Custom and Repair". Essentially the same practice has developed from the division of types of establishments between the various branches in the Census of Industry and Merchandising Division of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

The United Nations International Standard Classification and the Classification of Industries used for the Eight Census of Canada, 1941, custom shops, hand trades and repair establishments are classified in the Manufacturing Division to the same group as the manufacture of the article repaired. To provide flexibility, in cases where custom and repair establishments comprise a relatively large number of distinctive units (e.g. automobile repair garages, blacksmithing, shoe repair, watch and jewellery repair, custom tailoring and dress-making) separate classes are assigned to these activities.

After considerable discussion it was decided to follow the procedure used in the Population Census classification for the following reasons:

- (a) It is the accepted method in most countries.
- (b) Much repair work is carried out in manufacturing establishments such as Railway Car Shops, Shipbuilding concerns, Electrical Equipment Manufacturers, Machinery Manufacturers and Machine Shops, etc. Building repairs are recorded as part of the activities of the Building Construction Industry. The same is true of highway repairing.
- (c) Although annual coverage by the General Manufactures' Branch of the Bureau of such establishments as shoe repair shops may not be practicable, the branch does, in fact, record considerable repair work and at least the omission of some repair establishments could be mentioned in overall reports on Manufacturing Industries.
- (d) From the point of view of the type of material worked with, the processes and skills used, most repair shops are small manufacturing establishments.
- (e) There is no question that custom shops are manufacturers.
