In 1950, the population of Canada was 14,600,000. By 2025, it is projected to reach 40,000,000. This growth is due to a combination of factors, including immigration and a declining birth rate. The population is expected to be more urban and more diverse in terms of ethnicity and language. The aging of the population is also a significant trend, with a larger proportion of the population being 65 years of age or older. This will have implications for the social security system and the labor force. The government is expected to implement policies to address these challenges, such as increasing immigration and encouraging higher birth rates.
