Preface

Statistics Canada and the Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment (CCME) have developed this inventory of provincial and territorial databases of potential use in environmental reporting. The inventory is one component of the Environmental Information System (EIS) at Statistics Canada.

This volume is a companion to the 1991 federal government database inventory jointly prepared by Statistics Canada and Environment Canada and titled Databases for Environmental Analysis: Government of Canada (Statistics Canada and Environment Canada, 1992). Each volume provides an inventory of databases representing diverse sources of environmental information available for application in state of the environment reporting.

This inventory of provincial and territorial governments builds on a variety of federal, provincial and territorial initiatives to catalogue databases. These include: the Atlantic Coastal Zone Database Directory (Land Registration and Information Service, 1992); the TERRAMON Database, held by Memorial University of Newfoundland (Berger, 1992); the Catalogue of Environmental Data in Atlantic Canada, published by Environment Canada (Spencer, 1991); REPEN, produced by the St. Lawrence Centre (Environment Canada, 1992); the Electronic Inventory of Environmental Data for the Hudson Bay Region, collected by Environment Canada and now part of the Northern Information Network held by Indian Affairs and Northern Development Canada; and the British Columbia Resources Inventory Committee (DMG Group, 1993).

This report is the result of the first comprehensive effort to compile information of provincial and territorial databases for use in reporting on the State of the Environment. Readers are encouraged to contribute and/or identify relevant data holdings that may have been missed. Please refer to the Environmental Database Information Form provided in Section 7.1 (pages 289-291).

1. Introduction

In analysing environmental patterns and trends for State of the Environment (SOE) reporting, one draws upon a wide variety of information. Sources include measures of human activities and environmental processes, data on the state of environmental media and biotic health, and statistics on regulatory and household actions taken in response to environmental concerns. These data come from diverse sources and include the holdings of many federal and provincial/territorial ministries and agencies as well as private sources. The state of the environment reporter needs a means to identify these data sources, to evaluate the appropriateness of the information the bases contain, and to determine how to access the data themselves.

Statistics Canada and Environment Canada have recognized the need for such a tool to assist in the preparation of their own state of the environment reporting products. Databases for Environmental Analysis: Government of Canada, was released in December 1992 in printed report and computer diskette formats.

Presently many provinces have prepared, or are beginning to prepare, their own SOE reports and recognize the value of a comprehensive inventory of databases that are available in provincial/territorial jurisdictions. To date, however, there are only limited collections of this information and there is no comprehensive collection to serve the reporting needs of all provincial/territorial jurisdictions.

This publication is the first national effort to develop an inventory of provincial and territorial databases of potential use in environmental reporting. It was a cooperative effort among Statistics Canada and the provinces and territories through the Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment (CCME). The inventory is a meta-database, that is, a database of databases.

Such an inventory offers a number of benefits. First, the completion of this inventory contributes to the timely and comprehensive picture of environmental databases held by the federal, provincial and territorial governments in Canada. It also guides users to data sources, facilitates access to this information and assists in identification of data gaps in existing environmental information. Second, the inventory enhances the work of the CCME SOE Task Group and its effort in development of a menu of environmental indicators. Improved knowledge of, and access to, environmental databases enables accurate assessments by the provinces and territories of the data required to support indicator development. Improved data access also benefits the work of other CCME mandated groups. Third, the inventory promotes individual efforts by jurisdictions contemplating SOE reporting programs. Finally, the co-operative development of this inventory strengthens the SOE partnerships currently being forged by the CCME SOE Task Group.

2. Background

There has been a growing recognition in recent years of the importance of periodic analysis and reporting of environmental conditions and trends for development of policies that are environmentally sound and that foster environmental sustainability. Only with reliable information about the state of the environment, and the processes that contribute to environmental conditions, can government, business institutions and private citizens respond appropriately.

Efforts by the Government of Canada to provide this comprehensive environmental picture began in the early 1980's as a cooperative effort involving Statistics Canada and Environment Canada. A first national State of the Environment Report for Canada (Environment Canada and Statistics Canada, 1986) was prepared jointly. Statistics Canada also released a second edition of the statistical compendium, Human Activity and the Environment (Statistics Canada, 1986). Through these projects, the departments realized that effective state of the environment reporting required extensive knowledge about sources of environmental information. Therefore, after the release of the reports in 1986, state of the environment reporting entered a new phase that recognized the need for the systematic development of new environmental information and the means to better exploit the information that already existed. Another major development during this period has been the adoption of an ecological approach for information management, analysis and reporting. This phase has seen the publication of the second state of the environment report The State of Canada's Environment (Government of Canada, 1991) and the third and fourth editions of Human Activity and the Environment (Statistics Canada, 1991 and 1994). The third edition of the national state of the environment report is planned for 1996.

Many provinces have also issued reports on the state of the environment. Quebec released its second report, titled l'État de l'environnement au Québec, 1992 in the summer of 1993. Quebec was the first province to release a state of the environment report. L'environnement au Québec was published in 1988. Manitoba published its first report, State of the Environment: Report for Manitoba, in 1991. A second edition was released in 1993. Saskatchewan also released its first report in 1991, and has now released a second report. British Columbia combined efforts with Environment Canada to produce the State of the Environment Report for British Columbia.

The four Atlantic Provinces have also worked closely with the Atlantic Regional Office of Environment Canada to produce several regional reports, including Environmental Quality in the Atlantic Region, 1985. The preparation of state of the environment reports is also underway in Ontario, Yukon and Alberta.

2.1 Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment: State of Environment Reporting Task Group

The Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment (CCME) is the major intergovernmental forum in Canada for discussion and joint action on environmental issues of national, international and global concern. Environment ministers from each of the ten provinces, two territories and the federal government participate in council meetings twice each year. They discuss environmental issues, exchange information, make decisions and establish policy for work to be carried out under the auspices of the CCME.

The Council initially established the State of the Environment Reporting Task Group in 1990 for a two year period. The mandate was subsequently extended to 1994. The CCME "environmental scan" for the year 1991-92 identified both improved decision-making and state of the environment reporting as high priority areas for CCME joint efforts. The November 1991 Strategic Overview confirmed, and made more specific, these commitments and the actions to be taken to achieve them.

Priority tasks in the Group's work plans include development of a menu of environmental indicators for use in reporting to the public by governments, establishing priorities for the design and implementation of a national ecological monitoring network and the identification of needs and opportunities to harmonize state of environment reporting activities.

Four SOE Task Group workshops on these topics have been successfully completed. The November 1991 Environmental Indicator Workshop in Toronto was widely attended by the various government jurisdictions and was given the task of developing harmonized environmental indicators for use by member jurisdictions. In October 1992, a second workshop was held on the development of a network of ecological monitoring sites. The third Task Group workshop on harmonizing state of environment reporting activities, in March 1993, discussed continuing cooperation on matters pertaining to the collection, analysis and dissemination of environmental information. The development of this national inventory of provincial/territorial environmental databases, in cooperation with Statistics Canada, was one of the major recommendations arising from this third workshop. It was subsequently endorsed by the Deputy Ministers later in the month. In January 1994, a fourth workshop recommended development of a strategy for SOE harmonization and among other initiatives, it was agreed that the task group should begin preliminary work on a collaborative assessment of databases inventoried in both the federal database publication (Statistics Canada and Environment Canada, 1992) and this volume.

2.2 Environment statistics at Statistics Canada

Statistics Canada collects information on the social and economic activities of Canadians. Since the mid-1970's, Statistics Canada has also maintained an on-going program to serve the needs of a growing community of users of environmental data. Products include:

- an environmental information system containing social, economic and biophysical information for environmental analysis;
- source books of environmental statistics and research results;
- surveys and other new statistics on environmental themes;
- natural resource and environmental accounts and research into environment-economy linkages as part of Statistics Canada's national accounting activities.

2.3 Environmental Information System

The contents of this publication and diskette, together with the contents of the federal environmental database report, form the content of the Database Reference System (DBRS), one component of Statistics Canada's Environmental Information System.

The DBRS documents and facilitates access to information on available federal, provincial and territorial government environmental databases. The development of the DBRS has involved the participation of many federal, provincial and territorial agencies. Databases of both regional and national geographical coverage are included. Regularly updated databases where temporal trends can be examined are considered to be of most value, but others have also been included as they can be useful in providing baseline data against which future data can be compared. Databases stored in machine readable format, in paper files or in any other formats are included.

Since the mid 1970's there has been increased use of socio-economic statistics for environmental analysis. Socio-economic data have been demonstrated, in both Canada and other countries, to be invaluable in the assessment of human activities which place stress on the environment. Therefore not all of the databases included in the DBRS and this publication are concerned with strictly environmental phenomena as measured by biologists or ecologists. A socio-economic focus puts environmental issues into a broader perspective since there are many economic activities competing for environmental resources. Socio-economic information combined with environmental factors begin to explain relationships about the environment and the use of its resources. Understanding these interrelationships is essential in assessing the sources of many environmental problems.

The core of Statistics Canada's Environmental Information System (EIS) is a geographically referenced set of socio-economic and environmental statistics based on Geographic Information System (GIS) technology. The GIS provides the facility to combine socio-economic micro-data with external environmental data. A wide range of data on population and human activities as well as biophysical conditions is held. Information can be custom tabulated to suit the specific needs of the researcher.

A third component of the EIS is a collection of statistical tables which present a broad selection of environmentally relevant information. Most of these tables appear in the Statistics Canada publication Human Activity and the Environment and they are also available on diskette. They are updated as new information becomes available.

3. Inventory methods

Departmental database managers were interviewed over the telephone, or solicited by letter, concerning environmental databases for which they were responsible. During each 10 to 20 minute discussion, a standard information form was completed (see Section 7.1) to describe the database(s) identified. In response to the letter solicitation, database managers completed and returned database information forms. Following editing and standardization, all completed database descriptions were returned to respondents for final verification.

4. Report organization

The results of the database inventory are summarized by province and territory in Table 1. Over 830 databases were identified in 101 departments and ministries. The database descriptions presented in Section 5.1 are ordered by province and further grouped by department/ministry. The provincial order is Statistics Canada's standard provincial ordering while the departments/ministries are ordered alphabetically. Two index listings are provided at the end of the report: the Keyword Index cross references keywords listed for each database; the Entry Code Index provides a link between the identification code assigned each database (for reference on diskette) with the corresponding page number from this report.

The databases are also organized into broad subject matter categories to provide the user with an alternative means of identifying data sets of interest. This listing appears as Section 7.2. The subject matter categories are drawn largely from the Population-Environment-Process framework which served to organize Human Activity and the Environment, 1994 (Statistics Canada, 1994). The subjects cover elements of population, the socio-economy, natural systems and the interactions occurring among them.

In most cases the names of provincial/territorial government departments are not translated. The exceptions being all New Brunswick departments and some institutions where official translations do exist.

The user of this report should be aware that the purpose of this inventory is to catalogue and highlight sources of information. If the reader has an interest in a particular database, the person identified as the database contact should be contacted directly for additional information.

Users are advised that many of the databases identified are not held for the primary purpose of serving public requests for information. Many serve the needs of specific government programmes, and mechanisms are not in place for the rapid processing and tabulation of large numbers of general data requests.

5. Database descriptions

Information on each of the databases is presented in a standardized format consisting of eleven items similar to those in the federal inventory (Statistics Canada and Environment Canada, 1992). These items provide a summary of information that allows the user of this publication to evaluate the contents of any given database and determine the value of the data set for a particular application. The purpose for which the data were collected, the summary list of contents, the geographical and temporal coverage, output format and restrictions and conditions of use will all be important in this regard. This listing also provides the name, address, telephone (and facsimile) number of a person the user of this report may contact to obtain additional information.

The list of keywords in each database entry is intended to aid user searches for databases addressing a particular subject. Most entries also identify related documents in print. Users may wish to obtain these documents for additional information on the subject of interest. An additional list of databases organized by broad subject matter headings is also included in this report as Section 7.2.

The following section presents all database descriptions prepared for this report.

Snow Pillow Data

SPD-0253-E

- 1. Summary description: The purpose of the network is to determine the water content of accumulated winter snow during the winter season and particularly prior to snowmelt in order to estimate the subsequent streamflow. This is of great benefit to those concerned with hydro-electric power, flood control, irrigation and domestic and municipal water supply. All snow pillow stations also record temperature and precipitation and transmit data via DCP.
- 2a. Responsible organization: Ministry of Environment, Lands and Parks
- 2b. Database contact: Mr. Helmut Ovie, Technician, Water Management, Ministry of Environment, Lands and Parks, 4th Floor, 765 Broughton Street, Victoria, B.C. V8V 1X4
Phone: (604) 387-7669 Facsimile: (604) 356-5496
- 2c. Access mechanisms: Through the responsible organization.
- 3a. Parameters measured:
- precipitation
 - temperature
 - snow water equivalent
- 3b. Data acquisition methods: Snow pillow data collection platform (DCP), GOES Satellite. Snow pillows are 3 or 3.5 m diameter vinyl coated fabric bags filled with a 40 percent propylene glycol 60 percent water mixture. A buried rubber hose with valves and fittings leads from the snow pillow to the base of the manometer tube attached to the side of the scaffold tower. The sensor is an incremental shaft encoder mounted in the shelter. Resolution is 0.01 ft per count and counts are accumulated by the DCP's up/down counter. During each service trip the shaft encoder tape reading is recorded and compared to the DCP reading. Sensor readings are recorded by the DCP each hour and transmitted every 3 hours.
- 3c. Geographic coverage: British Columbia.
- 3d. Geographic units of measure: Latitude and longitude.
- 3e. Period of record: 1970 to present.

- 11. Additional information:
1. The Water Management Branch (WMB) of the BC Ministry of Environment is the agency of the provincial government charged with the responsibility of managing the water resources of BC. The greatest proportion of British Columbia's major river streamflow originates from the spring and summer melting of mountain snow. The WMB therefore has a need to know the water content of the winter snow accumulation in the mountains and thus operates a network of snow survey and snow pillow stations.
 2. Snow Pillow Data can be queried from the Snow Survey System, but is not part of that database.

One of the BCFS goals is to provide sensor capability at selected sites based on Forest Protection needs as well as the needs of others within the Forest Service and other agencies. A barometer has already been tested and will be deployed at strategic sites.
 4. Automated Weather Link: 200 hourly reporting stations, UHF telemetry to central VAX computer. 250 daily reporting stations, VHF telemetry to 43 district offices then loaded from PC's to central VAX.

BC Forestry Research Branch FRDA Climate Network

FRD-0220-E

1. Summary description: The British Columbia Ministry of Forests, Research Branch, established climate stations in various regions of the province, under the Forest Resource Development Agreement (FRDA), to improve seedling regeneration after forest harvesting. Environmental limitations are a major reason for failure of seedlings to establish and grow. Measurements were made to define the current climate and how site preparation treatments modify the seedlings microclimate.

1. As part of a study by the Ministry of Forests, sites were selected around BC (dependent on area and vegetation types), each identified as having regeneration problems. Sites established by individual researchers and projects initiated in different years. Most researchers had initial advice from Ministry climatologists on measurements to make and procedures to use.
2. Quality control varies with the individual researcher, as does data summary and storage.
3. Climate measurements made in clearcuts of varying size (usually large) and there was no control of the vegetation regrowth during the summer, or the development of a snow pack during the winter. Some stations ran for 12 months of the year, however, rainfall measurements are only valid during the snow free season. Other stations ran from May to October. A total of 62 stations were in the network.

Upper Pentiction Creek Experimental Watershed

UPC-0211-E

1. Summary description: To investigate forest harvesting impacts on water quantity and quality in the dry, southern interior. Initially the focus of the project was simply to identify changes in streamflow volumes, particularly low flow, following timber removal. More recently the project has expanded to include impacts not only on the hydrograph but also on chemical, physical and microbiological water quality following various rates of cut in two different forest types. The experiment has shifted from an input/output study to one which attempts to increase our understanding of the watershed processes. The climatological program addresses the various components of the water balance.

Short landlines are required to allow exposure of the anemometer to winds while the precipitation gauge is located in a sheltered, forested site.

7.2 List of database titles by subject matter categories

In this report databases have been listed by the responsible department/ministry for each province or territory. To aid users, this section lists the same databases classified by broad subject matter categories. The subject matter headings are drawn from the Population-Environment-Process Framework (PEP). This framework was used as the organizing basis for Statistics Canada's environmental publication Human Activity and the Environment, 1994. This framework was also applied to the federal government inventory (Statistics Canada, Environment Canada, 1992). The framework includes categories (see Table 2) on Human Population, Social and Economic institutions and elements of the environment and the processes of interaction that take place among these entities. In many cases databases can be found under a variety of subject headings. For additional information on the PEP framework refer to Human Activity and the Environment, 1994 (Statistics Canada, 1994).
