Chair's message

It is an honour and a privilege to have been named Chair of the National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians (NSICOP). The Committee has a broad mandate and the necessary independence to review the full range of issues and activities related to Canada's national security and intelligence framework. In the course of its work, members will be given access to highly classified information and intelligence and will have the ability to critically examine the effectiveness and compliance of all federal departments or agencies involved in national security and intelligence. Canada now joins its Five-Eyes counterparts, all of whom have long-standing legislative bodies that review national security and intelligence matters.

The Prime Minister will receive an Annual Report from the Committee that will include completed reviews and activities, or any other special report that the Committee deems necessary. The Annual Report must be tabled in both Houses of Parliament.

The National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians will count on the Executive Director of the Secretariat and team to provide members with expert advice and support in fulfilling its mandate.

All members of the Committee are committed to non-partisan and responsible scrutiny of national security and intelligence activities on behalf of all Canadians. I look forward to working with my colleagues from the House of Commons and Senate on this important new mandate.

The Honourable David J. McGuinty, M.P., P.C.

Chair

National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians

Executive Director's message

I am pleased to submit the 2018-19 Departmental Plan for the Secretariat of the National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians.

In the year ahead, I look forward to supporting the work of the Committee and seeing the Secretariat operate at full complement, once the construction of its facilities has been completed. My staff and I will assist the Committee in contributing to the overall accountability framework for national security and intelligence activities in Canada. The Secretariat will also be engaged in developing the appropriate tools and processes for the Committee to conduct reviews, access classified information, ensure compliance with security requirements, and produce the first Annual Report by the end of this calendar year.

In the pages that follow, you will learn more about how the Secretariat of the National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians plans to contribute to raising understanding of Canada's national security and intelligence machinery.

Rennie Marcoux
Executive Director

Plans at a glance

The National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians represents the newest addition to Canada’s security and intelligence review apparatus. The Committee has been given the broad mandate to review the legislative, regulatory, policy, administrative, and financial framework for national security and intelligence. It may also review any activity carried out by a department or agency that relates to national security or intelligence, as well as any matter relating to national security or intelligence referred to it by a minister of the Crown. The Committee is composed of eight Members of the House of Commons and three Senators, each of whom has been granted a Top Secret security clearance to fulfill their responsibilities.

Each year, the Committee will be required to submit a report of the reviews it conducted during the preceding year to the Prime Minister. The Committee may also produce special reports on any matter related to its mandate. The Prime Minister will table the Annual Report before both Houses of Parliament.

The mandate of the Committee is designed to complement those of other review bodies to strengthen accountability for Canada’s national security and intelligence activities, thereby enhancing Parliamentary and public understanding and trust of those activities.

In this first year of operation, the Secretariat will focus its efforts on supporting members of the Committee to build their understanding of the various components and activities of the security and intelligence community. The Secretariat will also be engaged in developing the appropriate tools and processes to conduct reviews, based on access to highly classified information, and produce its first Annual Report within the first year of its establishment.

For more information on the Secretariat of the National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians’ plans, priorities and expected results, see the “Planned results” section of this report.

Planned results: what we want to achieve this year and beyond

Assist the National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians in fulfilling its mandate

Description

The Secretariat's core responsibility consists of a range of activities to ensure the National Security and Intelligence Committee of Parliamentarians receives timely access to relevant, classified information, as well as strategic and expert advice in the conduct of reviews and development of reports and support to ensure compliance with security requirements.

Planning highlights

As its overarching result, the Secretariat will directly contribute to enhancing Parliamentary scrutiny over national security and intelligence activities. In support of this outcome, the Secretariat will focus efforts in 2018-19 on creating tools and processes and building capacity to assist the Committee in fulfilling its mandate. These activities will include:

- Developing and implementing a familiarization program for Committee members;
- Developing procedures to support the conduct of Committee duties and functions;
- Developing a work plan for reviews to be conducted during the calendar year based on Committee direction;
- Conducting research and analysis to support reviews and providing strategic advice to the Committee; and
- Developing information sharing protocols with key federal departments and agencies and with review bodies to ensure timely access to relevant information and appropriate protections of classified information.

With a broad mandate, access to classified information, and the independence to set its own agenda, the Committee will strengthen Parliamentary scrutiny while enhancing democratic accountability of national security and intelligence matters. While much of the Committee's work will of necessity be conducted in secret, it will produce an annual public report of its review activities, findings, and recommendations. As such, the work of the Secretariat to assist the Committee in ensuring that Canada's national security and intelligence institutions are effective and accountable, and that they maintain the confidence of Parliament and Canadians.
