

Commuting in Canada's three largest cities

In 2016, 1.5 million Canadians spent at least 60 minutes travelling to work.

Of the three largest cities in Canada, Toronto had the highest proportion of commuters who spent 60 minutes or more travelling to work.

Toronto	— % —→	17
Montréal	— % —→	12
Vancouver	— % —→	11

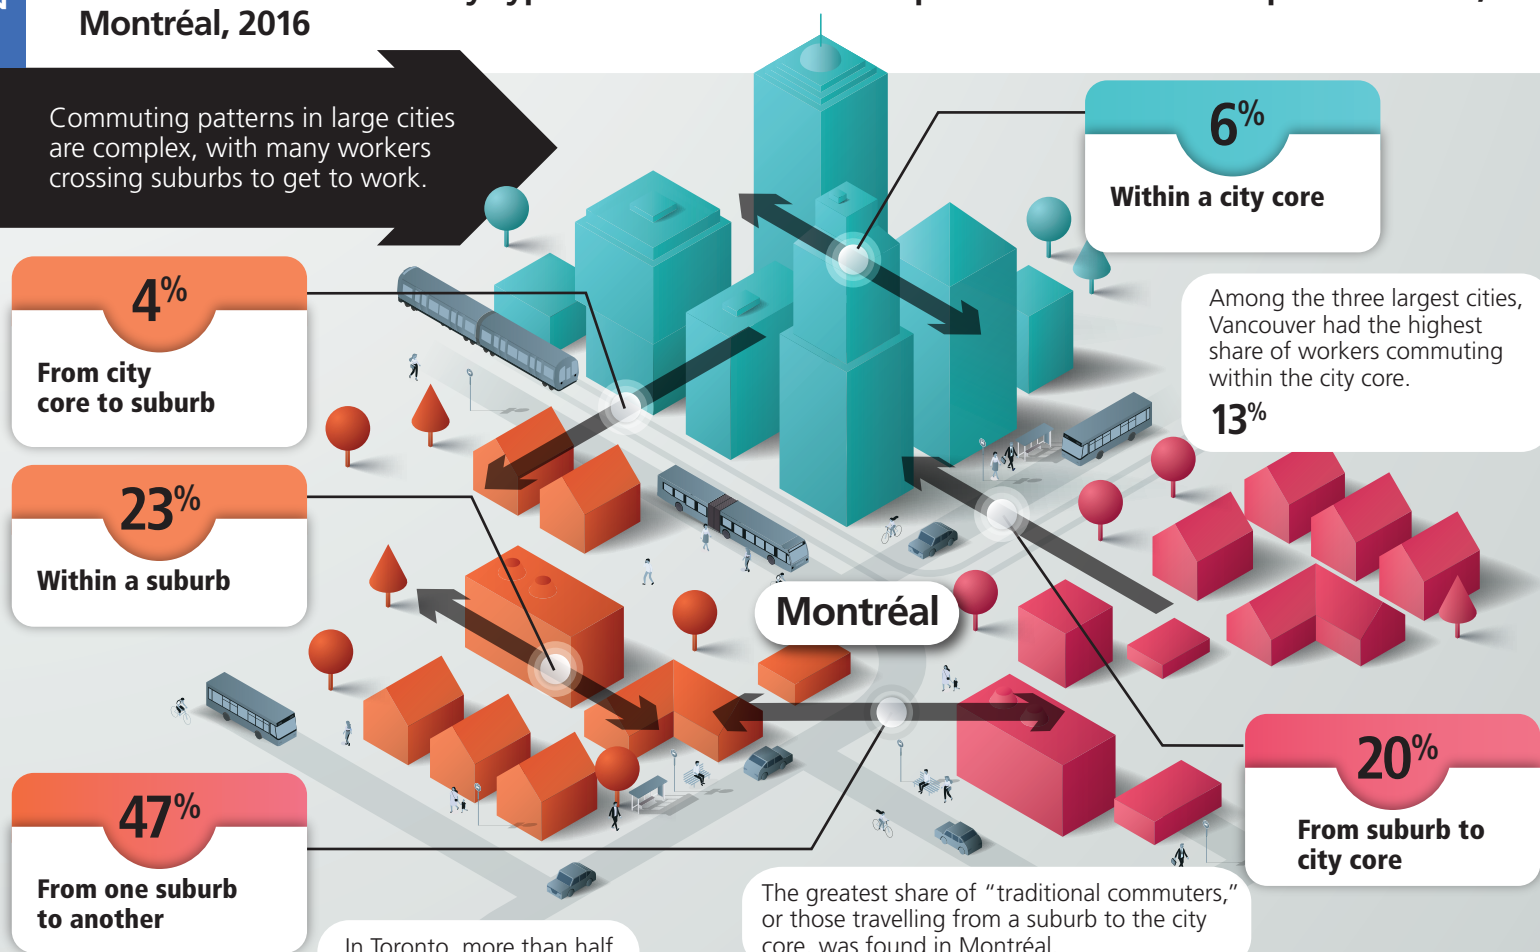

Job locations were scattered across all three cities.

In Toronto, 1 in 4 people had a place of work located 25 km or more from the city centre.

Distribution of workers by type of commute between place of residence and place of work, Montréal, 2016

Commuting patterns in large cities are complex, with many workers crossing suburbs to get to work.
