Key considerations for an accessible return to the workplace during a public health crisis

- Involve employees with disabilities early in the planning process to ensure proper accommodations are in place.

- Show employees the steps taken to support their safety before they return to the workplace.

- Communicate new procedures in plain language. Sign language and other alternate formats should always be available if needed.

- Meet with employees with disabilities often to be sure all accessibility and safety needs are met.

For more information, read our accessible practices for returning to the workplace: accessible.canada.ca/resources/best-practices-accessibility-working-home