HISTORY

- From time immemorial, Inuit and their languages have been present in the land that we now call Nunavut.
- Between the 16th and 19th centuries: The first Anglophones and Francophones to come to the area are part of exploration, fur trade, whaling and military expeditions.
- 20th century: English-speaking and French-speaking minorities begin to settle more permanently in what is now Nunavut.
- 1970s: The federal government opens regional offices with bilingual English-French employees in Iqaluit. Services in French are then offered to those living in the territory.
- At the same time, a number of French speakers from Quebec, recruited by Bell Canada to build the infrastructure necessary for the development of Iqaluit, settle in what is now Nunavut.
- 1981: The organization that is now the Association des francophones du Nunavut is created.
- 1993: The first elementary school program with French as the language of instruction is launched.
- 1999: The territory of Nunavut is officially created.
- 2001: The only French-language school in Nunavut, École des Trois-Soleils, opens.
- 2002: The Franco-Nunavois flag is adopted.
- 2004: The Commission scolaire francophone du Nunavut is created.
- 2008: The Legislative Assembly of Nunavut passes its Official Languages Act, which recognizes three official languages: Inuktitut, English and French.
