2 MAY - 4 SEPTEMBER 2017

In celebration of Canada's 150th anniversary, Canadian Artists in Photographs presents images showing some of the country's most gifted artists, from the mid-nineteenth century to the present. Included are rare and notable photographs of late nineteenth and early twentieth-century painters such as Cornelius Krieghoff, an artist famous for his scenes of Indigenous peoples and French-Canadian settlers prior to Confederation; Tom Thomson, an artist best known for his depictions of the Ontario landscape and his influence on the artists who comprised the Group of Seven; Walter Allward, a sculptor responsible for numerous public monuments in Canada, as well as the Vimy Memorial in France; Prudence Heward, a member of the Beaver Hall Group in Montreal and one of the country's best portraitists of the 1930s; and Emily Carr, an artist acclaimed for her scenes of the Pacific Northwest Coast. The exhibition also includes artists who left a mark on Canadian art during the second half of the twentieth century, including Harold Town, Alex Colville, Paul Émile Borduas, Jean Paul Riopelle, Joyce Wieland and Greg Curnoe. The images include formal portraits, as well as depictions of artists in their studios and outdoors.

The photographs reveal the richness of the collections of the National Gallery of Canada Library and Archives, the largest resource for art-related material in the country. Portraits of artists have been a major collecting focus of the Library and Archives for the past several decades. Most of those included in the current exhibition are from the vast Visual Resources Collection, while others can be found in private collections, such as the Dominion Gallery and the Frances Gage fonds. The images featured date from the late nineteenth century to the present, and many have not been previously exhibited or published.

Canadian Artists in Photographs complements the National Gallery's redesigned Canadian and Indigenous Galleries, which opens to the public on 15 June 2017; most of the photographs shown in the exhibition depict artists whose works are featured in the new galleries. Additional images depict photographers such as Jennifer Dickson, Clara Gutsche and Nina Raginsky, whose works are being shown in the exhibition, Contemporary Canadian Photography: 1960–2000 (7 April – 17 September 2017).
