CERTIFICATION MARK DETAILS

Certification Mark Standard

In order to bear the Certification Mark, all categories/classes of goods referenced in this Application (other than timber forest products and herbs and spices, for which special rules are noted below) must (1) come from a farm that follows the Farm Requirements and (2) be sold to consumers through a supply chain by parties (i.e., first buyers, traders, processors and importers /exporters) that meet the Supply Chain Requirements. The Certification Mark indicates that the certified product or ingredient was produced using methods that support the three pillars of sustainability: social, economic, and environmental. Independent, third-party auditors evaluate the farmers that produce the products against requirements in all three areas before awarding or renewing certification. The methods used to produce the certified product demonstrate a commitment to continuous improvement, sustainability training, and clear benefits for farmers. The Certification Mark certifies that the products duly marked with this sign have successfully passed a suitable conformity assessment procedure that the applicant has performed as an independent body and that the conformity of the products have been checked against the specific requirements for each product. The certification of the products follows the "2020 Rules for Certification Bodies" document code SA-R-GA-2 V1.2 (provided online at <https://www.rainforest-alliance.org/for-> business/2020-certification-program/ and <https://www.rainforest-alliance.org/resource-item/2020-rules-for-certification-bodies/>) being the rules of conformity according to the Applicant's standards. Conformity assessment demonstrates that those requirements outlined in the 2020 Rules for Certification bodies are met with respect to a product, process, system, person or entity. The Applicant's mark applies to conformity assessments of products. Rainforest Alliance (RA) certification is an essential tool to support sustainable agricultural production, forestry, and supply chains. The RA certification scheme relies on several certification standards in order to classify materials, farms and other organisations as certified. The goods should be manufactured by farmers that have been audited to meet standards that require environment, social, and economic sustainability. The suppliers are audited regularly to verify that farmers are complying with comprehensive guidelines built on sustainable farming principles including: Biodiversity conservation Improved livelihoods and human wellbeing Natural resource conservation Effective planning and farm management systems Farm requirements: These include requirements in the following areas: Topic Description of Farm Requirements (See 2020 Farm Requirements at 2020 Sustainable Agriculture Standard: Farm Requirements | Rainforest Alliance (rainforest-alliance.org) for more detail) Management Farms and groups must implement an integrated planning and management system, with processes and systems for continuous improvement. Good planning and management contribute to farm productivity and efficiency, and to reduced environmental impact. Increased efficiency in the use of land, water, fertilizers, and pesticides also supports climate change adaptation and mitigation (Climate Smart Agriculture). To help achieve this outcome, the Management section includes topics related to management capacity, farm and group administration, data management, sustainability assessment and management planning. Requirements on these topics follow a process of assessment, planning, implementation, evaluation, and adjustment. Based on the Risk Assessment, specific mitigation and adaptation practices are defined. Farm and group administrators play a key role in facilitating this planning process. This subject also includes requirements on the collection of geolocation data to assure traceability of certified products; that they do not come from deforested area nor from protected areas in which production is strictly forbidden. Collection of GPS polygons provides more accurate data on farm size, which in turn can also support farm management for instance by facilitating analysis for volume estimation. Finally, this subject includes the cross-cutting themes of gender and youth participation. The inclusion of these topics in the management section recognizes the fundamental importance of these issues, and that they apply to multiple dimensions of farm and group activity. Rather than requiring a certain level of gender or youth participation, the standard encourages farm-specific and context-specific targets and activities to reach member's appropriate goals Traceability This section requires a robust, transparent system to track products from the farmer along the supply chain up to the level of the retailer. The requirements in this section provide producers with a framework to accurately and credibly record the quantities of certified production within their operations, their segregation from non-certified products, sales transactions, conversion methods, and Certification Mark use. Income and Shared Responsibility This section includes two elements. The first is the Sustainability Differential, a mandatory monetary payment paid to producers on top of the market price for the sale of certified crop. The second is Sustainability Investments which are made by market actors to contribute to the investments needed to drive sustainability progress at origin. This section starts with two self-selected requirements on production costs and living income to enhance the profitability and income of farmers. The concept of living income recognizes the goal that farmers are able to improve their business profitability and at least earn an income to allow their families and households to have a decent standard of living. Farming This section focuses on the outcomes of sustainable agriculture, crop productivity and profitability, and natural resources and ecosystem services. Included amongst these outcomes are the goals of Climate Smart Agriculture and food security:

farms and groups mitigate and adapt to climate change and increase their resiliency by implementing sustainable practices and diversifying when possible. The topics in the farming practices section work together to achieve these outcomes. Agronomic activities related to sustainable production practices, soil fertility and conservation, integrated pest management, and safe agrochemicals management support the outcome of sustainable productivity and profitability, as well as natural resource conservation and ecosystem services. Here the requirements encourage locally-relevant and context-specific practices to ensure that inputs and natural resources are used efficiently, natural cycles are optimized to increase climate change resilience, soil fertility and health is enhanced, pollinators are attracted, water retention and management is improved, pesticides are minimized, and further negative effects on the environment are reduced. Finally, crop profitability is supported by post-harvest practices, where farms and groups achieve improved crop quality to meet market demand. Implementation of requirements in this section forms part of the foundation of a broader set of sustainable agriculture activities, so when combined with other field, market, and advocacy interventions, can support impacts at the sectoral and regional level.

Social This section seeks to empower producers and workers to realize better working and living conditions for themselves and their families; to promote equality and respect for all with special attention to vulnerable groups such as migrants, children, youth and women; and to strengthen human and labor rights protections on certified farms. Sustainable agriculture is intrinsically linked with the livelihoods of millions of producers, families, and their communities. To support sustainable livelihoods, the Rainforest Alliance Sustainable Agriculture Standard establishes requirements related to all fundamental human and labor rights, Living Wage, health and safety, and decent living and working conditions. Farms and groups are required to respect legal and customary rights of indigenous peoples. These requirements align with the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights (UNGPs), relevant ILO conventions, and other multi-stakeholder concepts such as Living Wage, developed in coordination with the Global Living Wage Coalition. There is no place in farms using the Certification Mark for human rights violations such as child labor, forced labor, discrimination or workplace violence and harassment. For these four types of violations, our certification system will adopt an "Assess-and-address" model, which goes much further than a simple prohibition approach in its ability to drive change. Given the high risk of such violations in some agricultural supply chains, we will require farms and groups to put a rigorous system in place, that includes doing a risk assessment and implementing related mitigation measures, conducting regular self-monitoring, and remediating any known cases of such violations. Severe cases, if not remediated, and/or violations of applicable law, will lead to a negative certification decision, suspension or cancellation of the certificate. This "Assess-and-address" model is further detailed in requirement 5.1 and related annexes. Furthermore, the certification system aims to enable agricultural workers and their families to achieve a decent standard of living and earn a Living Wage. To this end, the standard enforces respect for workers' rights to collective bargaining and freedom of association, healthy and safe living and working conditions and access to health care. Although the system aims to contribute to better wages for workers by requiring that the minimum wage is paid and that there is progress towards a Living Wage, the Applicant recognizes the limitation of producers to unilaterally solve the problem of low wages. In accordance with the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, our approach is to bring transparency on prevailing wages in agricultural production, commit Authorised Users to continuous improvement and dialogue, and encourage companies to exercise shared supply chain responsibility to prevent and mitigate adverse impacts with regard to insufficient wages.

Environment Agriculture can have positive or negative effects on the natural environment, depending on how it is managed. This section outlines pathways for certified farms to have a positive impact on the planet, and its forests, biodiversity, water and climate. The first section in this chapter supports the outcome that farms and groups do not contribute to deforestation, forest degradation and destruction of other natural ecosystems, and that they conserve, maintain, and restore natural ecosystems and their services. The topic of wildlife and biodiversity supports the outcome that farms and groups avoid degradation of natural habitats, contribute to improving biodiversity, and help to prevent the extinction of threatened species. For the topics of water, waste, and energy, farms and groups reduce pollution, treat wastewater and minimize release of hazardous pollutants, and reduce waste and energy through prevention, reduction, recycling and reuse. A self-selected topic is added for farms and groups taking the step towards measurements of greenhouse gas reductions. Finally, throughout this section and the farming practices section, the Farm Requirements work towards the outcome of farms and groups adopting climate adaptation and resilience techniques and supporting climate change mitigation.

Supply chain Requirements: These include requirements in the following areas: Topic Description of Supply Requirements (See 2020 Supply Chain Requirements at 2020 Sustainable Agriculture Standard: Supply Chain Requirements | Rainforest Alliance (rainforest-alliance.org) for more detail) Management Farms and companies must implement an integrated planning and management system, with processes and procedures for continuous improvement. This section includes topics related to management and responsible business conduct. Requirements on these topics follow a process of assessment, planning, implementation, evaluation and adjustment. Through the use of our Risk Assessment Tool, companies define mitigation and adaptation practices for specific topics to include in their management plans. This first section also includes the cross-cutting theme of gender. The inclusion of this topic in the management chapter recognizes the fundamental importance of gender, and that it applies to multiple dimensions of a company's activities Traceability This section requires a robust, transparent system to track products from the farmer along the supply chain up to the level of retail. The requirements in this chapter provide Authorized Users with a framework to accurately and credibly trace certified product and report any activity performed on the certified product (including conversions and sales) in the Rainforest Alliance traceability platform. Income and Shared Responsibility This section includes two elements. The first is the Sustainability Differential, a monetary payment paid to farm certificate holders on top of the market price for the sale of certified crop. The second is Sustainability Investments which are made by buyers of certified product to contribute to the investments farm certificate holders need to drive sustainability progress at origin. With the aim to go beyond the Sustainability Investment approach, this section also includes a set of requirements on the contribution to living wage payments at farm certificate holder level that supply chain certificate holders can self-select. Social The social section seeks to empower workers to realize better working and living conditions for themselves and their families; to promote equality and respect for all with special attention to vulnerable groups such as migrants, children, youth and women; and to strengthen human and labour rights protections on certified operations. To support sustainable livelihoods, the Applicant has established requirements related to all fundamental human and labour rights, health and safety, and decent living and working conditions. These requirements align with the UN Guiding Principles (UNGPs) on Business and Human Rights, relevant ILO conventions, and other multi-stakeholder concepts. Environment The environmental section outlines pathways for Authorised Users to have a positive impact on the planet. As there are environmental risks beyond just the scope of the farm, requirements apply also to supply chain actors that are identified as presenting a high risk for certain environmental topics, wastewater management as of now. Once again, the Applicant recognizes that certification fits into a larger picture of landscape conservation, where multiple strategies are needed to create lasting impact for biodiversity and planet.
