ENVIRONMENTALLY APPROPRIATE TECHNOLOGY – FOURTH EDITION

EN102-1-15

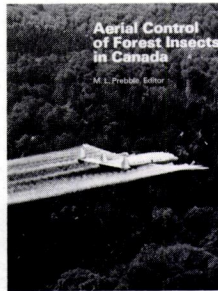

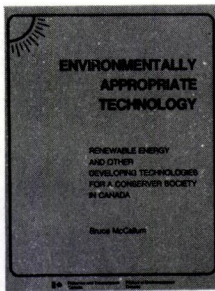

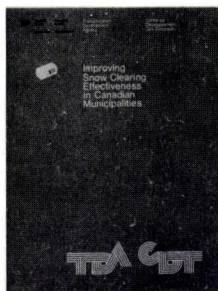

Paperbound

DOE

$3.75

Renewable Energy and Other Developing Technologies for a Conserver Society in Canada. The object of the study is to provide an integrated overview of environmentally appropriate technologies at their present stage of development, and to show their potential contribution within Canada for the development of a Conserver Society. It also suggests how Canada can contribute to Third World countries by demonstrating "environmentally appropriate development" to be a global concern. The paper is addressed to both the technically oriented and the general public. It is divided into 2 major sections: a) a description of current & developing environmentally appropriate technologies emphasizing renewable energy and b) a scenario describing how major components of our society can be adapted to create an idealized technological order utilizing these technologies. Illustrations.

MINERAL POLICY SERIES

A series of in-depth studies on a commodity-by-commodity basis, as well as a number of broader studies of specific mineral-related problems or impacts of the industry. Each study contains a detailed analysis of the present structure of a particular commodity, attempts to assess its future development, and identifies problems and reasonable opportunities within the context of the main options laid out in the analysis. This series is intended to provide a basis for informed discussion by all who are interested in the mineral industry, its development and its role in the economy of our country. Bibliographies. Tables. The number of pages varies.

CANADA HANDBOOK
(1977)

This colourful annual handbook presents a summary of recent social, cultural and economic developments in Canada. With lavish colour photographs and flowing narrative, it provides students, teachers and interested Canadians with an overview of Canadian life and its recent progress. Paperbound. 15cm x 22.5cm. 376 pp. CS11-203/1977. $2.95

PERSPECTIVE CANADA II

An important and thought-provoking publication presenting statistics on, and insights into, social trends in Canada. In addition to the 345 statistical tables, an introductory section in each chapter highlights its principal findings. Topics include population, the changing family, older Canadians, health, education, work, leisure, income, consumption, urban profiles, quality of the environment, housing, bilingualism, native peoples, crime and justice. A unique publication intended for all Canadians, from the interested citizen to the theorist. Tables, charts, maps. Paperbound, 21.5cm x 28cm. 340 pp. CS11-508/1977. $9.25
