Nutrition Canada Reports

Nutrition Canada was designed to determine the nutritional status of Canadians according to region, population type, income, season, and physiological group. These reports provide data and interpret the results of the survey for each province, and for Indians and Eskimos. The information in these reports will provide a scientific basis for further research, for modifying legislation regarding addition of nutrients to foods, and for planning future public health and nutrition education programmes. References. Tables, graphs. Approximately 275 pages in each report. Separate French editions.
