Family and Friendship Ties Among Canada's Seniors 1988 Issue

Statistics Canada released today the first national study of the patterns of family and friendship links upon which seniors rely for support.

Family and Friendship Ties Among Canada's Seniors, an analysis of data collected in the 1985 General Social Survey, shows how the network of family and friendship ties that one can expect to have varies systematically over the course of one's life. Especially at the oldest ages, this network is quite different depending on whether one is a man or woman.

The study demonstrates the substantial levels of help given to others by seniors, as well as the help they receive. It draws attention to the sharp rise in support flows, and in the need for support, once the 80 and over age group is reached.

Family and Friendship Ties Among Canada's Seniors

1988 Issue

Many of our senior citizens who live alone need a helping hand. How do they get it now? And will they continue to get it in the future as their numbers increase?

A new Statistics Canada study released today looks at the kind of family and friendship links upon which our seniors rely for support.

"Family and Friendship Ties Among Canada's Seniors" shows that nearly one-half of Canadians (aged 80 and over) who lived alone in 1985 had substantial potential support groups comprised of relatives and close friends. However, when one inquires whether family and friendship ties are actively maintained, the incidence of relatively thin potential support groups rises as age increases in the senior population. For example, nearly 30% of those who lived alone at ages 80 and over (women are the vast majority of this group) had "active" ties with less than two of five possible types of family or close-friend relations. (Ties were considered "active" if they involved telephone contact at least weekly or letter writing at least monthly.)

With an analysis of data collected in the 1985 General Social Survey, the publication shows how the network of family and friendship ties which one can expect to have varies systematically over the course of one's life. Especially at the oldest ages, the network of one's potential supporters differs strongly between men and women. This book, authored by Dr. Leroy O. Stone, brings to light patterns of personal ties with potential supporters that have never before been the subject of a national study in Canada.

The study demonstrates the substantial levels of help given to others by seniors, as well as the help they receive. For example, more than one fifth of those aged 55 and over provided transportation assistance to others, and 60% of this help was on behalf of friends and neighbours.

In dealing with the help received by seniors in selected aspects of daily living, such as mobility, self-care, shelter maintenance, meal preparation, and money management, the publication draws attention to the sharp rise in support flows, and in the need for supports, after 80 years of age. The 1986 Census and the latest population projections indicate a very high growth rate (nearly 4% per year, on average) in the number of Canadians aged 80 and over, both recently and in the near future.

Suggesting that traditional arrangements for the provision of social supports to persons of all ages may have to undergo major transformation in the decades ahead, Family and Friendship Ties Among Canada's Seniors argues that the study of human support networks is very important because these supports typically require that those giving assistance allocate substantial amounts of their time to this effort. Since the availability of the needed volume of personal time for human caring services in a given community cannot be easily altered by any specific action on the part of any organization, the assistance exchanged between the elderly and their supporters is a matter worthy of careful consideration by all Canadians as individuals and as family members.

Family and Friendship Ties Among Canada's Seniors (89-508, $20) is now available. It contains a wide array of charts that display different aspects of kinship ties and sharing of assistance by the elderly and their supporters. See "How to Order Publications".

Construction Union Wage Rate Index June 1988

- In June, the Canada total Union Wage Rate Index (including supplements) for construction trades (1981=100) remained unchanged from May's level of 141.1. On a year-over-year basis, the 18-city composite index increased by 0.3% from 140.7.
- The following table shows wage rates for reinforcing steel erectors, roofers and asbestos mechanics for selected cities.

Available on CANSIM: matrices 400-405, 956 and 958.

The second quarter 1988 issue of Construction Price Statistics (62-007, $16.50/$66) will be available in September. See "How to Order Publications".
